

The Surrenderness Dream 6-22-23 @2:56am

I dreamed again my love. I am with a friend, and we each have upon our backs heavy hiking backpacks that are huge and packed firmly with needed items of necessity. I knew they were needed items. The backpacks are of a canvas type material in army green. We are traversing valleys and mountain ridges, both of us have a walking stick that we are using, As we continue our journey all throughout this dream at different intervals I take out a small book from within the backpack as we momentarily rest and make notes and write in the book. We're sitting now at a campsite in front of a small fire, when I receive a note, a message from a flying bird that brings it to me, then flies away, "Come and help us immediately." is what it reads. I notice now that even though we are sitting around the fire, I'm still wearing my army green backpack, while my friend, his, is laying upon the ground, not far from where he was sitting. "We've got to go," I cried out, "duty calls." as I stand quickly up to begin our trip ahead, although we've had very little rest. My friend jumps up slowly, and then with great difficulty he places a heavy backpack again upon his back. "I don't think I can make it." he says to me as I point to a very large mountaintop, we must climb to reach those in need of help. I looked at him with a very hard look of determination, then I whipped out my trusty journal and wrote these words, this one line, and my journal was laying flat open so it could be easily read by any who cared to read it, in bold printed English so it's easier to read than cursive, and it says: "It takes total surrenderness to Him."

Then I awoke suddenly out of sleep. Those written words echoed still in my ears. It takes total surrenderness to Him. Not surrendering, but surrenderness.

Surrender: means to give up completely, or agree to forego, especially in favor of another. To give oneself up into the power of another or to something.

When you add a “ness” in English grammar, that then becomes a state, or condition or quality, so it becomes the word “surrender”, with any ‘s’ added means: “the being in the state, the quality of condition or surrender”. So when the Lord says it takes total surrenderness to Him, surrenderness to Him means: “the state of having totally surrendered your will for going your own in favor of His, Jesus’s perfect will”.

You have to be in a state of total surrenderness to Him.
